Re: INFRINGEMENT NOTICE
XHOSE® – U.S. Patent Nos. 8,291,941, 8,291,942, & 8,479,776

Dear Mr. McGuire:

This firm represents Blue Gentian, LLC and National Express, Inc. regarding U.S. patent enforcement, protecting an Expandable Hose marketed under the trademark XHOSE®. As you have been made aware through previous correspondence, the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office issued Patent Nos. 8,291,941 (the '941 Patent - attached) and 8,291,942 (the '942 Patent - attached) for the XHOSE® Expandable Hose Assembly. This letter is to advise that the U.S. Patent Office has further issued U.S. Patent No. 8,479,776 (the '776 Patent) directed to the Expandable Garden Hose (a copy of which is attached). Patents directed to the XHOSE® have also issued in Australia, Canada and China, and are pending in Eurasia, Europe, Japan, Korea, Mexico, New Zealand, Philippines, Russia, South Africa, Taiwan, Thailand, United Kingdom and Ukraine, with other PCT countries yet to be entered.

The sale of expandable hoses that fall within the claims of these patents is patent infringement. As you are aware, a patent owner must provide actual notice to infringers to recover damages, under the requirements of 35 U.S.C. § 287. Continued infringement following such notice permits a court to increase damages threefold under 35 U.S.C. § 284. This letter constitutes renewed notice of the '941 and '942 Patents, and current notice of the '776 Patent, with respect to your company's sale of the "POCKET HOSE" distributed by Telebrands Corporation.

This firm is presently enforcing the XHOSE® patents against Telebrands. Telebrands has claimed that the '941 and '942 Patents are invalid in light of an aviation reference entitled "Self-Elongating Oxygen Hose for a Stowable Aviation Crew Oxygen Mask" (U.S. Patent No. 6,523,539 issued to McDonald, et. al. - attached). It is remarkable, however, that Telebrands knew of the aviation reference before the '941 and '942 Patents issued, yet chose not to bring the reference to the attention of the Patent Office or Blue Gentian, LLC's counsel, in order to have it immediately addressed. Rather than allow the Patent Office to resolve patentability, Telebrands elected to file suit for patent invalidity, in an overburdened federal court, at midnight on the date the '941 and '942 Patents issued. Just as it did in its court filing, we presume that Telebrands' previous communication to you compared figures from the '941 and '942 Patents with cropped, incomplete figures from the McDonald aviation reference. Shown below, however, are the actual Figs. 2 and 3 from the McDonald reference, on the right, next to the cropped Figs. 2 and 3 presented by Telebrands.

Telebrands Cropped Figures

Actual Figures

Blue Gentian has provided the McDonald aviation reference to the Patent Office which, despite Telebrands contentions, has granted the '776 Patent. Bed Bath and Beyond, and its related companies, continued sale of an infringing product, with no cognizable defense, constitutes willful infringement and indicates its willingness to participate in patent infringement. A patentee is allowed to request that the acts of a willful infringer be rectified through the payment of enhanced damages, regardless of an infringer's indemnification arrangements with its supplier.

We demand that you immediately cease further sales of any infringing products and provide us with sales information from October 23, 2012 to-date for the POCKET HOSE in terms of both unit and dollar volume. Blue Gentian and NEI will forego damages from these past sales if you provide this information, and agree to purchase only licensed XHOSE® Expandable Hose products, through a favorable response received within fourteen days of your receipt of this letter.

Please govern yourself accordingly.

Sincerely,

Patents directed to the XHOSE® have also issued in Australia, Canada and China, and are pending in Eurasia, Europe, Japan, Korea, Mexico, New Zealand, Philippines, Russia, South Africa, Taiwan, Thailand, United Kingdom and Ukraine, with other PCT countries yet to be entered.

The sale of expandable hoses that fall within the claims of these patents is patent infringement. A patent owner must provide actual notice to infringers to recover damages, under the requirements of 35 U.S.C. § 287. Continued infringement following such notice permits a court to increase damages threefold under 35 U.S.C. § 284. This letter thus constitutes notice of the '941 and '942 Patents, and the '776 Patent, with respect to your company's sale of the "POCKET HOSE" distributed by Telebrands Corporation.

This firm is presently enforcing the XHOSE® patents against Telebrands. Telebrands has claimed that the '941 and '942 Patents are invalid in light of an aviation reference entitled "Self-Elongating Oxygen Hose for a Stowable Aviation Crew Oxygen Mask" (U.S. Patent No. 6,523,539 issued to McDonald, et. al. - attached). It is remarkable, however, that Telebrands knew of the aviation reference before the '941 and '942 Patents issued, yet chose not to bring the reference to the attention of the Patent Office or Blue Gentian, LLC's counsel, in order to have it immediately addressed. Rather than allow the Patent Office to resolve patentability, Telebrands elected to file suit for patent invalidity, in an overburdened federal court, at midnight on the date the '941 and '942 Patents issued. As it did in its filing with the court, Telebrands' may have previously communicated with you by comparing figures from the '941 and '942 Patents with cropped, incomplete figures from the McDonald aviation reference. Shown below, however, are the actual Figs. 2 and 3 from the McDonald reference, on the right, next to the cropped Figs. 2 and 3 presented by Telebrands.

Blue Gentian has provided the McDonald aviation reference to the Patent Office which, despite Telebrands contentions, has granted the '776 Patent. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., and its related companies, continued sale of an infringing product, with no cognizable defense, constitutes willful infringement and indicates its willingness to participate in patent infringement. A patentee is allowed to request that the acts of a willful infringer be rectified through the payment of enhanced damages, regardless of an infringer's indemnification arrangements with its supplier.

We demand that you immediately cease further sales of any infringing products and provide us with current sales information for the POCKET HOSE in terms of both unit and dollar volume, and related dates. Blue Gentian and NEI will forego past damages if you provide this information, and agree to purchase only licensed XHOSE® Expandable Hose products, through a favorable response received within fourteen days of your receipt of this letter.

Please govern yourself accordingly.

Sincerely,

McHale & Slavin, P.A.
